... bird, on the ... little Lucy, as on a pleasant summer ... was returning from visiting her aunt Lizzie. ... the little birds."

Little L... only a little more than two years old, and she could not speak very plain. But she could chatter fast enough in her broken language about the little birds, which God had made to sing so sweetly. She loved dearly to hear about the "obin redbreast" and "ellow obin," as she called them, and often wished that they would hop round the door, or perch upon the window, so that she might feed them with crumbs of bread.

On her way to her aunt's house, she had heard several yellow robins cheerily singing. They were somewhere in a large tree which we passed, but they were so hidden by the branches, that it was in vain the little girl strained her eyes to find them. And so, we were obliged to go on our way, without having a glimpse of the little musicians.

On the way home, Lucy was very eager to see one, and after waiting some minutes under the large tree, in which I suppose they had builded their nest, one came out from among the branches. The little girl had, however, hardly time to raise a cry of joy, before the robin had re...d, and ... hidden from sight by the branches. ... whether little ... of us.

... a nest of young ... can see the little birds stick- ... a cruel act, but we are ... put the nest back. ... birds came flying ... that it made him feel ... their little ones again. ... the whole scene repre- ... write them from memory, ... we were a boy about thir- ... seen them since.

... you fast,
... one, two, three, four,
... long, you're mine at last,
... you'll 'scape no more.

... flutter, as you will,
... 'tis in vain,
... lodg'd still,
... freedom then obtain?
... note of sorrow strikes my ear!
... ir mother thus distress'd!
... see their father dear
... and round to seek the nest.

... your moan?
